YOUR GUIDE TO LITERATURE STUDY

TERMINOLOGY FOR NOVELS AND SHORT STORIES

Plot	The events that happen in a story. A very important component of the plot is conflict. Without conflict a story lacks energy. The way in which characters solve the problems of the story are what makes stories exciting or engaging. Some plots deal with external events (soldiers go to fight a war, they trick the enemy and win the war) while in other stories the characters go on a more internal journey of change. For example: a young bushman girl remembers her grandmother and comes to discover her true identity. Some stories combine both internal and external journeys.
Sub-plot	A smaller story within the larger story. Sub-plots all contribute in some way to the overall plot of the novel. Sub-plots have their structure (conflict, climax, resolution) within the larger plot.
Plot structure:
Exposition	The background information on the characters and the setting explained at the beginning of a story. It is often the first part of the plot.
Rising action	The stage in a story when conflict is introduced and things in the plot start to get more complicated. This often forms the largest part of a story or novel.
Climax	The word 'climax' comes from the Greek word meaning 'staircase' or 'ladder'. It represents the highest point of the drama and the most exciting part of the story. Usually this is when a character faces the biggest danger and risks losing everything. These dangers can be external or internal.
Falling action	That part of the story that happens after the climax. The characters recover from the drama of climax and some of the problems or conflicts of the story become sorted out.
Anti-climax	A disappointing outcome after a lot of excitement and expectation.
Resolution or Denouement (pronounced DAY-noo-ma)	The ending of the story: This is where the sub-plots all get sorted out, any loose ends get tied up and lessons get learnt.

Story endings	Stories can end in many different ways. Some endings describe external events and some describe an internal journey of discovery. Some of the more common endings are: <ol style="list-style-type: none"> 1. A closed ending – all the conflicts get resolved. For example, the villain dies. 2. An open ending – we are not clear what happens. We are left to work it out for ourselves. 3. An ironic twist – we expect a story to end in a certain way and then it surprises us and ends differently.
Foreshadowing	A technique used by writers to hint at something that is to come.
Flashback	A tool used in writing to allow us to know more about a character's background. Flashbacks enable us to explore events that occurred at a different time to the events of the story.
Ironic twist	An unexpected change in the outcome of a plot. Often this twist is foreshadowed at the beginning of the plot in some way.
Conflict	The problems or difficulties experienced by characters. These conflicts can be external (dangers and obstacles), internal (lessons to be learnt) or may involve questions that need to be answered. Conflict is an essential component of stories. Without it, many stories lack energy and we are not compelled to keep reading.
Suspense	A story has suspense when we don't know how the characters are going to act. We feel greater suspense for characters we care about; the more that a character stands to lose, the greater the suspense we feel.
Characters	The creatures, animals or people in a story. Bad characters are called villains and the good characters are called heroes. Many characters are a mixture of good and bad. The main characters in a novel will all undergo some kind of transformation (or change) as the story progresses.
Characterisation	The personality given to characters: are they kind, quick, lazy, hardworking, greedy or friendly? We work out what the characterisation is by looking at what characters say and do and the way in which other characters treat them.
Role of narrator	All stories are told by a narrator or storyteller. The author pretends to tell the story through the eyes of someone else. The two most common narrators used by authors are: <ul style="list-style-type: none"> • the first person narrator – a character from the story tells the story from their own perspective. The first person narrator always uses the pronouns 'I' and 'we'. The advantage of this narrator is that we see the story through the eyes of one character and inhabit their world. • the third person narrator – the story is told by someone who does not actually appear in the story but sees everything that happens to all the characters. The advantage of this technique is that we get access many different perspectives in the story.

Message and theme	The purpose of the story. Often this becomes clear when we ask a question like: What values does this story promote? Common themes might include: <ul style="list-style-type: none"> • The importance of family • The importance of not giving up in the face of difficulty • The ability of those that appear powerless to change their own lives • Good triumphing over evil
Background	What happens before the story starts. All novels frame certain moments in the lives of its characters, but all characters come with backgrounds or back stories. These get skilfully woven into the plot using different techniques: <ul style="list-style-type: none"> • As readers we 'eavesdrop' on conversations between characters who are strangers to each as they introduce themselves • Letter/school projects or diary entries in which we discover more about a character's background • Sometimes events on the plot trigger certain memories which present an opportunity for an author to develop the back story.
Setting	The place and time of the story. This can also include the weather. Weather often contributes in some way to the mood or the plot development: it will often mirror internal feelings of certain characters.
Mood	The atmosphere or feelings created by the story.
Suspense	A story has suspense when we don't know how the characters are going to act. The more that characters stand to lose, the greater the suspense we feel. Techniques to create suspense include: <ul style="list-style-type: none"> • Cliff-hangers (chapters that end just at that point where we want to know more). • The insertion of questions, riddles, mysteries to be solved. • Suspense is greatly increased if we care about the characters involved. We want to know if they will overcome their difficulties and we like to believe that they will remain heroic. Suspense is created when there is the threat that they might go over to the 'dark side'.
Surprise	All good stories should have the element of surprise. In many stories the surprise element is what keeps us turning the pages: we want to know how the characters are going to solve their problems and triumph. Surprise is most satisfying when authors have created a world where the resolution takes us by surprise but is still plausible within the constraints of the plot. It is unsatisfying when some 'supernatural' external event that no one could have foreseen, swoops in to 'save the day'.

THE WRITE STYLE (ENGLISH)

Cathy Harris and Bobby Keal

This is a useful reference book for scholars, those already in the work place, or at home. It provides all you ever wanted to know about how to write.

- Has your teacher ever instructed you to write a book review?
- Has your lecturer ever instructed you to write a critical essay?
- Have you ever wanted to write a letter to the editor of your local newspaper?
- Has your boss ever asked you to take minutes at a meeting, or draft a flyer?

If so, this user-friendly manual is a must-have. It offers a set of guidelines to the writing of numerous genres in an easy-to-use reference book.

A hands-on reference tool and teaching aid aimed at structuring the most common writing tasks required in schools and in the business world.

Each genre has the following:

- Model text
- Genre-specific criteria
- Language and structural requirements
- Evaluation summary.
